PHILA. DETECTIVES TO DIG IN CELLAR

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 11.-City detectives will dig up the cellar of a house in Fifteenth street near Federal, suspected of being a "baby farm." Six white children said to have been at the house are missing.
Suspicion attaching to their disappearance grew out of an inventigation

Hungry Children Found. When Detective Sergeant Doyle and other officers visited the Fifteenth street house, they say, they found seven white children there. The chil-dren were in a miserable condition, it is declared, and had been living on bread and coffee.

Looking after the children was a Mrs. Blackston.

Looking after the children was a Mra. Blackstone. She was arrested, but permitted to stay at the house, as there was no one else there to look after the children. The Society to Practic Children from Cruelty has Protect Children from Cruelty has been potified.

Police Make Charges The police further say that Worthington Cresswell, one of the defendants held today, is a son of Mrs. Blackstone. Both Creaswell and Margaret Seiles, detectives assert, have negro blood, although both maintain they are white.

Detectives Doyle, Beckman, and Lyons say there have been thirteen white children at the Fifteenth street It is six of these children who have disappeared. Cresswell told the detectives the seven boys and girls found in the house were his brothers and sisters.

WOMAN AGED 110 DIES.

UTICA, Aug. 11.-Mrs. Philipa Shapley, 110 years old, died at her home in West Winfield after a week's illness. She was the oldest woman in the State.

who is learning to ride wonders how on earth it is possible to stay on. That is a contrast which every musketry instructor must keep continually in his mind. If he does not he will forget that to every recruit the rifle is a new and perhaps a dangerous thing. He approaches it with respect. Exactly as with the bicycle he wonders not only how he will manage it, but what it will do with him. That is why you cannot drill men into shooting as you can drill them into shooting as you can drill them into forming fours, and why with harshness and impatience you may spoil a good man at musketry. You are doing more than to teach him to do a new thing, you are putting a strange instrument into his hands, as you might give him a curious animal. strange instrument into his hands, as you might give him a curious animal, and he has to become accustomed to it. If you let him fire his first shot with a loose grip and hurt himself with the kick, you may make him permanently afraid of it.

That is an obvious carlessness which every good instructor avoids, but he has to do more, he has to remember that every man with imagination enough to learn at all must have a certain gun shyness at first even if he never shows it, and must wonder what the first shot will feel

It's only a change in stalls!
Yet, what it means for the house-keeper; in a change in the family dietary; in another drive at the bogsy of meatless weeks—when the horse today moved out of his box stall into Stall No. is at the Westlake Market! For it was here that Seattle today bought its first horse meat. Shew Nervousness.

Gun shyness is a well chosen expression and in the exact sense of it every man is gun shy at the beginning, but it is used more often simply to describe the more obvious physical nervousness that some men horse meat.

That's not the only "stail" in this changing diet which the Range Horse Meat Company is trying to put over in Meat Company is trying to put over in this city—a change, or supplementary help, for beef, mutton, lamb, pork and veal. There is going to be a lot of "stalling" before the horse meat cuts reach their ultimate objective—the din-physical nervousness that some men show when they first handle a rifle. It is very difficult to find a cause for it. It may perhaps be a repugnance to sudden noise, a repugnance which, if you knew the man's past, you would find to have shown itself in other ways. At the same time it is interesting to note that artillery officers do not find as much gun shyness among their men as might be expected from the greater volume of noise. Or it may be the excessive nervousness of an imaginative man at handling a dangerous thing for the first time in his life, or it may, in rare cases, be a definite fear of some particular accident, a fear of which the man himself is perfectly continued.
